

General stores were very important in the everyday lives of many rural towns.

They were called "general" stores because they stocked a wide variety of items. These stores played a vital role in the small backcountry towns because it provided food and other daily essentials to the whole town. These stores were needed for the town to survive. The store's location was very important for prosperous business, because it needed to be somewhere easily accessible. The best locations would probably have been near rivers, since that was a popular mode of transportation in the 1800s.

Coker & Rogers, Inc. is a general store in Society Hill, South Carolina that was established in 1828. It was started by two friends, Caleb Coker and Eli Gregg. The store went through many different owners in the Coker family over the years. Locals bought most of their items from this store, and families were allowed to charge and keep items on a tab.

The Lenoir Store is very similar to the Coker & Rogers, Inc. They are both general stores from the 1800s that have stayed in business for a long time. Each served their communities by providing general necessities to the public. The Lenoir Store is a little different from Coker & Rogers, Inc. The Lenoir Store also has a post office inside the store. It has also been recognized as a historical landmark. Today, the store still sells items similar to those found on the shelves the day the store opened.

The general stores of the 1800s were essential in the growth of cities, because they provided food, medicines, clothing, and other daily items. General stores from the old days are similar to modern time megastores. They sell a wide variety of items that people need to live. General stores played a vital role in the growth of the colonies. ^{states}